

Mr. Clinton is the special representative for Haiti from the United Nations. The UN is an organization that helps countries in need and maintains peace around the world. He visited Haiti to deliver supplies. Mr. Clinton appreciates the Current effort, but he thinks more could and should be done about Sewage and garbage removal. Mr. Clinton said the international response in Haiti was even better than the response to the Indonesian tsunami. He did say, though, that more needed to be done to improve sanitation. Mr. Clinton suggested that international groups like the UN start stockpiling sanitation equipment the same way it stockpiles other relief supplies. He also said that they should create better plans and practice them so that future disasters could be handled even better. Dr. Farmer, an assistant to Mr. Clinton, said Haitians need to be trained to deal with sanitation issues. Other UN officials are also concerned about sanitation. The upcoming rainy season will only make things worse because the waste and water will mix and have no place to go. This could make many people very sick. There are some facilities being built, but more needs to be done. The UN is providing food for many people.
